

Recovery Satisfaction Construct and Construct-Related: Assessment Measurement from Item Response Theory

Martín Hernani-Merino

mn.hernanim@up.edu.pe

Department of Marketing and International Business
Universidad del Pacífico, Lima, Peru

Giuliana Isabella

Inspere – Institute of Education and Research, São Paulo, Brazil

Enver Gerald Tarazona Vargas

Department of Science
Pontificia Universidad Católica del Perú

José Afonso Mazzon

School of Economics, Management and Accounting
University of São Paulo, São Paulo, Brazil

Abstract

Researchers have explored the antecedents and consequences of recovery satisfaction by creating, improving or using scales. However, scales should be invariant among contexts and cultures. Using item response theory (IRT), a methodological approach that helps measure items, we evaluated some constructs related to it. Results, limitations and future research are discussed.

Keywords: Item response theory, recovery satisfaction.

<https://doi.org/10.21678/jb.2019.1137>

Paper received 23/08/2019 paper accepted 05/12/2019

Hernani-Merino, M., Isabella, G., Tarazona Vargas, E.G. & Mazzon, J.A. (2019) Recovery Satisfaction Construct and Construct-Related: Assessment Measurement from Item Response Theory. Journal of Business, Universidad del Pacífico (Lima, Peru) Vol.11(1): 2-13

Editor in Chief: Prof. Dr. Luis Camilo Ortigueira-Sánchez